

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Applications for 21st Century Community Learning Centers grants are now available.

The Clark County School District will apply for 21st Century Community Learning Centers (CCLC) grants, which, if awarded, will provide academic and enrichment opportunities to students during out-of-school times. At-risk schools are encouraged to submit an application, as are organizations throughout the community. Planning meetings will be held to design the programs, and student, parent, and community input is encouraged. The public can contact the 21st CCLC office for specific meeting dates.

21st Century Community Learning Centers will be located on school campuses. Direct academic support, community service opportunities, and enrichment activities complement school-day activities and enhance school-wide goals for success. Tutoring and homework help will be available for students; parents and families will also have an opportunity to take classes and participate in various activities. All schools will be required to work with community partners including private industry, community-based organizations and faith-based organizations.

Applications must be submitted to the funding agency by June 1, 2015.
